

After you receive your background report from JSI, what's next?

In addition to extra printed copies of your report that you can provide to potential employers, we'll also provide you with the JSI Digital Verification Badge, which enables you to quickly and easily show potential employers that you've completed a background check. The badge itself is a QR code, which can be implemented into social media profiles, placed on resumes, and more. When a hiring manager or HR professional clicks or scans the QR code, they're taken to your personal verification page, which confirms the results of your background report.

With a JSI Digital Verification Badge, you can:

- Approach your job search with confidence
- Stand out as a preferred candidate
- Move through the hiring process faster
- Save potential employers time and money

You may be wondering where you can put your badge to ensure that employers find it. Here are just a few suggestions for how to use your Digital Verification Badge:

LinkedIn and Other Social Networks

While LinkedIn is the most obvious place to put your Digital Verification Badge, it works just as well on other networks. Consider sending it via a Direct Message on Twitter after a round of digital networking, or incorporating it into your Facebook Cover Image.

Resume

You know that your resume is the best place for explaining former jobs and giving potential employers insight into your skills. By placing your Digital Verification Badge onto your resume, employers can gain an even deeper insight into your authenticity. This gives them security and peace of mind, helping you move through the hiring process even faster.

Business Cards

While the digital age may have rendered some technologies obsolete, the business card is still an important part of networking. Why not place your Digital Verification Badge on the back of a business card? You'll give your new connection all the information they need to know, right up front.

Online Portfolio

Whether you're a graphic designer, a writer, or simply a tech-savvy executive, placing your Digital Verification Badge on your online portfolio helps employers connect your skills with your authenticity.
